

Editorial

Feipeng Wang

Editor-in-Chief Emeritus
Chongqing University, China
f.wang.2015@ieee.org

Beyond the Farewell

As I pen down these words, a bitter-sweet mix of emotions overwhelms me. Gratitude, pride, even a hint of wistfulness, all vying for center stage. This past year as editor in chief has been nothing short of extraordinary, a tapestry woven with the threads of intellectual discourse, groundbreaking research, and the sheer thrill of witnessing scientific minds illuminate the world. Serving in this capacity has been an incredible journey filled with growth, challenges, and, most importantly, memorable experiences.

I envisioned our Magazine as more than just a magazine. It is to be a platform that not only showcases insightful content but also fosters a sense of community and intellectual curiosity, also a forum where seasoned veterans and ambitious newcomers come together to push the boundaries of knowledge. Looking back, I am proud to say that, together, we have achieved that and more. Each submitted manuscript, each meticulous review, each lively editorial discussion has been a testament to the insatiable human hunger for discovery. Our journey has been marked by the brilliant minds that contributed their thoughts, the passionate readers who engaged with our content, and the dedicated team that worked tirelessly behind the scenes. Each article, interview, and feature became a thread weaving the vibrant tapestry of knowledge and ideas that our Magazine came to represent.

As an editor, witnessing the diversity of perspectives and the depth of expertise from our contributors has been truly humbling. We explored topics ranging from cutting-edge technology to socioeconomic issues, and every piece added a unique layer to our editorial landscape. Your commitment to quality content has been the backbone of our Magazine's success, and for that, I am sincerely grateful.

Looking ahead, I am confident that the future holds even greater promise for our Magazine. The landscape of information and media is ever evolving, and I encourage the incoming editor in chief, Mark Winkler, and his editorial team to embrace innovation, adaptability, and the pursuit of excellence. Our Magazine should continue to be a beacon of knowledge, guiding readers through the dynamic currents of our rapidly changing world.

To the readers, your support has been the wind beneath our wings. Your feedback, engagement, and enthusiasm have fueled our passion to deliver content that matters. I encourage you to remain avid consumers of knowledge, always questioning, exploring, and seeking the truth.

As I step down from the role of editor in chief, I express my deepest gratitude to everyone who has been a part of this incredible journey, especially our esteemed senior, yet youthful, Alun Vaughan. An emeritus professor from the University of Southampton, Alun served as a dedicated member of the editorial board for years before deciding to step down. His dynamic presence infused our board meetings with a spark that ignited new ideas for invited article topics and editorials, and he played a pivotal role in facilitating numerous article reviews. I am confident that the memories we have created, the challenges we have overcome, and the knowledge we have shared together will forever be etched in the annals of our Magazine's history.

Farewell but not goodbye. Our Magazine will continue to evolve and thrive under new leadership. I look forward to watching its continued success and, perhaps, contributing from a different vantage point.

Wishing you all a future filled with discovery, growth, and unending curiosity.